What if you could make Europe WILDER simply by taking a HOLIDAY?
The European Safari Company is an initiative of Rewilding Europe to support the development of nature-based economies in the regions where we work, and beyond. The ESC is part of Rewilding Europe B.V., a limited liability company that is established for this purpose, and which is fully owned by the Rewilding Europe charitable foundation.
European Safari Company

Born from a desire to show people the beauty and drama of Rewilding Europe’s operational areas, the European Safari Company specialises in experiential nature-based travel. While the word “safari” has long been synonymous with Africa, we offer equally wild adventures right here in Europe, from the frozen Arctic north, to the sweeping forests of eastern Europe, to the rugged coast of the Mediterranean.

We offer unique experiences that directly support wild nature and wildlife comeback in some of Europe’s most special places. Places that often suffer from rural depopulation, land abandonment and economic downturn, where rewilding can breath new life and prosperity into these landscapes.

Travellers with the European Safari Company not only experience some of Europe’s finest nature, but directly learn about and contribute to rewilding and support local communities. Dedicated levies from each booking support rewilding initiatives, while local nature-based businesses benefit from income, job creation and developmental support from Rewilding Europe.
Central Apennines

Bears, wolves and beautiful landscapes in Italy’s wild heart

Living in Europe, nature is often much closer than we think. Less than two hours’ drive from the cafes and colonnades of Rome is a land that is both wild and wondrous. With craggy peaks topping out at nearly 3000 meters, ancient beach forests inhabited by bears, wolves and wild boar, and skies patrolled by golden eagles and griffon vultures, the Central Apennines truly are Italy’s “wild heart”.

Boasting several world class national parks, the Central Apennines are a nature lover’s playground. A complex system of mountain ridges and vast tablelands, this great topographic knot is the final refuge of many animals and plants that were once widespread across all of Italy’s mountainous areas. These include the endemic Apennine Chamois and the iconic Marsican brown bear.

Dotted with picturesque medieval towns and villages, the Central Apennine region is also home to a captivating local culture. With a heavy reliance on local nature, many residents practice “transhumance” sheep farming, beekeeping and fruit or nut farming.

It is this unique combination of nature and culture that makes the Central Apennines a thrilling destination ripe for exploration. Experiences offered by the European Safari Company focus not only on wildlife and nature, but also on local people who still live and work amongst bears and wolves.

REWILDING EFFORTS

There are currently around 60 Marsican brown bears (including newborns) roaming the Central Apennines, making their situation precarious. Today rewilding efforts focus on the development of a number of “coexistence corridors”, which enable these animals to move safely between the area’s network of national parks and nature reserves, diversifying genetics and boosting bear numbers.
EXPLORE THE CENTRAL APENNINES

During this four-day, privately guided experience you will witness the intimate relationship between wild nature and local communities. This is a really good way to understand the beneficial impact of rewilding, and the importance of using wildlife corridors to connect protected areas, thereby supporting the comeback of iconic species such as the Marsican brown bear.

The wild and dramatic landscape here is home to chamois, deer, wolves and golden eagles, as well as the rare Marsican brown bear. In addition to wildlife, you will encounter the region's ever hospitable people and their colourful and authentic culture.

Led by highly skilled nature guides, and sustained by some of the finest local food and wine, a journey into the Central Apennines is truly is an exploration of Italy's "wild heart".

Located on the Baltic coast of Poland and Germany, the exciting Oder Delta is a unique and wild region boasting a rich mosaic of terrestrial, marine and freshwater ecosystems. Like the Rhodope Mountains, it is strategically located at one of Europe’s great ecological crossroads.

The Oder Delta “big seven” charismatic species – the white-tailed eagle, European bison, beaver, elk, wolf, Atlantic sturgeon and grey seal – are some of the main attractions for guests. A new wilder landscape is beginning to take shape in the delta, with ever more diverse and abundant wildlife playing its ecological role with minimum human intervention.

The flooding of former polders along the Peene River on the German side has created exciting stretches of new wild nature - now discoverable on foot or by solar boat and canoe. The immense natural value of the area can be seen in the fact that two-thirds of all land and water are set aside for nature conservation and rewilding.

REWILDING EFFORTS
As a result of ongoing rewilding actions – carried out by Rewilding Oder Delta and a range of other organisations – today wildlife has begun to thrive in more natural densities in the Oder Delta, with uncontrolled natural processes reshaping the environment. Much of the work of the Rewilding Oder Delta team has so far focused on restoring fish migration – with the presence of healthy fish populations vital to local food chains – as well as developing nature-based tourism and supporting wildlife comeback, and wetland restoration.
EXPLORE THE ODER DELTA

Travel the Oder Delta at your own pace, equipped with the best gear and backed by our comprehensive support. Two half-day excursions into nature give you the best chance to experience the region’s amazing wildlife, both on foot and on water.

In the tranquility of the delta’s unspoiled nature you will come across storks, herons, white-tailed eagles, as well as otters and beavers (with luck!). The remains of Slavic castles, village churches and monasteries also wait to be discovered.

Rhodope Mountains

Wild nature and active pursuits at the crossroads of Europe

The Rhodope Mountains are an active nature lover’s dream. A strategic location at the crossroads of Europe and Asia, coupled with the influence of the Mediterranean and a low human population density, mean the area’s stunning landscapes and diverse habitats are a birdwatcher’s paradise.

The entire region is a Bulgarian stronghold for the wolf, golden jackal, souslik and otter, while the brown bear has begun to return in recent years, with bear watching becoming an increasingly popular activity.

This natural hotspot is also a great destination for hiking, biking and kayaking. The opportunity to combine outdoor activities with birdwatching, nature photography and animal tracking, all set against the backdrop of a hospitable local culture and rich cuisine, make this an epic eastern European travel destination.

Based on such rich natural resources, nature-based tourism is now on the rise in the Rhodope Mountains. With enthusiastic hikers and birding fanatics pioneering the area’s tourism experiences, offerings now include a range of welcoming guest houses, homestays and upmarket B&Bs.

REWILDING EFFORTS

While the sight of a soaring squadron of vultures is one of Europe’s great natural spectacles, today these magnificent birds are threatened across much of the continent. Focusing on the Rhodope Mountains rewilding area in Bulgaria, as well as a section of the Rhodope Mountains in northern Greece, the Rewilding Rhodopes foundation and partners are working to support the recovery and further expansion of the black and griffon vulture populations, mainly by improving natural prey availability, and by reducing mortality through factors such as poaching, poisoning and collisions with power lines.
SEVEN DAYS IN THE RHODOPES

Enjoy a fantastic range of experiences as you explore this magical region with a personal guide. With a focus on the area’s wildlife-rich wilderness, activities include hiking, kayaking, bird watching and wildlife photography, complemented by great local food and comfortable accommodation.

Swedish Lapland

Take a voyage through Europe’s Alaska

Fascinating indigenous culture. World-class river fishing. Close-up encounters with brown bear, moose and wolverine. Nights out under the Northern Lights. Log cabins, saunas and warming shots of aquavit. If this sounds like the holiday of a lifetime, you might want to consider the north of Sweden for your next vacation.

For lovers of the great outdoors, it’s hard to think of a more enticing European destination than Swedish Lapland. One of the continent’s last true wildernesses — frequently referred to as “Europe’s Alaska” — this unique region is characterized by great swathes of pine, spruce and fir, berry-carpeted tundra, whitewater rivers teeming with salmon, and rustic lakeside villages. In winter the entire frozen landscape is washed by the ethereal light of the aurora borealis, while iconic species such as Arctic fox, European beaver, Eurasian otter, wolverine and golden eagle take the opportunity to raise young in the summer months.

Sami communities have been living here for millennia, navigating the pristine landscapes with their migrating reindeer herds. Ever hospitable, today they offer visitors a warm welcome and an opportunity to learn about a very different way of life.

Swedish Lapland is a captivating destination regardless of the season. Here on the edge of northern Europe, going wild is always an unforgettable experience.

REWILDING EFFORTS

Criss-crossed by countless waterways, Swedish Lapland is defined as much by its rivers and lakes as it is by its sprawling forests. Working in collaboration with local fishing associations, Rewilding Sweden is now working to boost fish migration, through activities such as spawning ground restoration and the removal of artificial obstacles. It is also exploring new nature-based business opportunities, providing support to enterprises involved in catch and release fishing and wildlife watching.
HUSKY SLEDDING IN A WINTER WONDERLAND

During this four-day adventure you will experience Lapland in its truest form. You will go on a two-day dogsledding trip where you will sleep in a basic but comfortable wilderness cabin. You can enjoy being totally disconnected from everyday life and experience the very basics of being active in nature, team spirit with their own dog team, a crackling fire, quality time with friends and family, and delicious food together with the sled team and their friendly huskies.

To be out with the dogs in winter is a truly surreal experience. Travel through a white wonderland, witness the strength and the joy of the huskies, and learn everything about them.

The other nights you will sleep in Sörbyn Lodge, where you will enjoy local hospitality and a visit to the Sami people. We are located one hour north of the city of Luleå, meaning you can enjoy the combination of great accessibility and adventures in a remote wilderness.

New wildlife watching hides offer travellers the chance to see some of the remote mountain animals like bear, wolf, deer or wild boar in their natural environment. Travel here and discover some of Croatia’s most beautiful, undiscovered and fascinating areas.

Rewilding Efforts

The 145-kilometre long Velebit massif is one of the most biodiverse areas in the Balkans with a range of unique habitats. With many areas of this beautiful region now characterised by land abandonment, rural exodus and fading cultural tradition, Rewilding Europe is working with local partners to transform these challenges into opportunities. This has seen the establishment of the 17,000-hectare Velebit Nature Reserve, where rewilding is offering a fresh approach to wildlife management and underpinning the development of a local nature-based economy.

Located between the Douro River to the north and the Serra da Malcata in the south, Portugal’s Côa Valley is a spectacular mix of riverine gorges, oak forests, rocky heathlands and former cropland returning to nature. New sustainable travel here combines the finest natural and cultural experiences in the area, supporting local people and new independent nature reserves.

Western Iberia is home to griffon and Egyptian vultures, golden and Bonelli’s eagles, and endangered species such as black vulture, Spanish imperial eagle and black stork. The rabbit is perhaps the most important mammal species, a vital source of prey not only for the birds but also for carnivores such as mongoose, civets, martens, polecats and elusive wild cats. Rabbits rely larger on herbivores to clear large shrubs and roe deer are making a welcomed comeback together with species of wild horse and cattle are grazing freely in the Faia Brava Nature Reserve. Quite recently and for the first time Iberian wolves were spotted here, and it is hoped the Iberian lynx will soon be reintroduced.

Complementing this incredible wildlife, Western Iberia also has a rich human heritage. The Prehistoric Rock Art Sites in the Côa Valley are a UNESCO World Heritage Site, with thousands of animal, human and abstract figures carved into rock faces, some of which date back over 20,000 years. Together they make up the largest open-air collection of prehistory art in Europe. All this is complemented by delicious local cuisine and some of Portugal’s finest wines, sourced from the renowned Douro Valley.

There are many ways to discover Western Iberia, from a relaxing long weekend to a journey through the entire Côa Valley along the 200-kilometre Grande Route, on foot, by mountain bike or even on horseback. We can tailor your itinerary based on your interests, with your ideal combination of wildlife and culture, using expert guides and staying in handpicked accommodation. New and unique safari-style accommodation in Star Camp in Faia Brava and Miles Away fly camp bring you closer to nature in remote, dramatic settings.

REWILDING EFFORTS
Focusing on the Greater Côa Valley, these are exciting times for rewilding in Western Iberia, with new funding allowing efforts to be scaled up from the beginning of 2019. Rewilding Europe is working with local partners to shape the valley through the development of a 120,000-hectare wildlife corridor, restoring natural processes and trophic chains, encouraging wildlife comeback and driving the development of nature-based tourism.
PORTUGAL INSIDE AND OUT

Spend your first few nights at the exquisite Casa da Cisterna guest house, built in amongst the old ruins of Castelo Rodrigo. This magical boutique hotel is owned and run by a passionate local family who have steeped history in the area and a strong tie to nature spanning back decades. The quaint hotel offers very comfortable en suite rooms, delicious in-house dining and an amazing view from the infinity pool.

Explore the nearby nature reserve of Faia Brava, under the guidance of Fernando Romao – guide and wildlife photographer. A 4x4 safari, picnic lunch and vulture hide experience are all highlights in the area during the day, and as the sun sets a dramatic backdrop of stars set the scene for a visit to the ancient rock engravings and art in the Côa Valley.

A private tour to a famed local vineyard will fill evoke fascination in this famous port region, before you dine out under the stars at the one-of-a-kind Fly Camp, overlooking the dramatic Côa and Douro rivers. The setting is enhanced by a five-course meal with wine pairing, before you rest your head in this traditional, “Hemingway-style” camp.

Southern Carpathians

On the trail of bewitching bovines

Along the southern end of Romania’s arcing Carpathian Mountains, some of the continent’s largest wilderness landscapes are the perfect setting for a true European safari, boasting diverse wildlife, memorable experiences and the chance to connect with nature. Rugged mountain chains, mixed forest and beautiful rivers provide a magnificent playground for intrepid travellers.

Plopu Valley – near the village of Armenis – represents the border between wild nature and the cultivated lands of local communities. Plopu is frequented by bears in search of the spring harvest, as well as bison grazing in the meadows. Track free-roaming bison and other wildlife with a local guide, before spending each night sitting around the campfire listing to ancient ales and legends.

Now a rewilding stronghold, this area has seen over 100 bison returned to the wild – free to roam the Țarcu Mountains. If wildlife tracking isn’t the only activity on your wish list, the area also has great hiking, mountain biking and photographic opportunities.

Local communities have developed small tourism offerings over the last few years, and now these are flourishing. Every guest travelling to the region helps these small community businesses and directly supports rewilding.

REWILDING EFFORTS

Once widespread across Europe, wild European bison were driven to extinction in the early twentieth century by hunting and habitat loss. Starting in 2014, the ongoing Rewilding Europe / WWF Romania bison reintroduction programme is the largest ever attempted in the Southern Carpathians, where bison had previously been absent for 200 years. From a socio-economic perspective, the goal of Rewilding Europe and WWF Romania is to use wild nature – with a particular focus on the reintroduced bison – to promote the development of Southern Carpathian communities. This will lead to a large, interconnected wild landscape across several protected areas and their corridors, with the European bison as the flagship species.
BISON, BEARS AND BEAUTIFUL LANDSCAPES

At the southern end of Romania’s arcing Carpathian Mountains some of Europe’s largest wilderness landscapes are now being created. This is the perfect place to experience a true European safari, with rugged landscapes, fast flowing rivers, diverse wildlife experiences and the opportunity to really connect with nature. Led by expert guides, bison tracking experiences will give you a unique insight into the behaviour and ecological importance of these magnificent creatures.

Since 2013, Rewilding Europe, WWF Romania and the local association AMZA have been working together in the Southern Carpathians rewilding area to bring the European bison back into the wild. The first bison releases took place in 2014 and 2015.

In June 2016, the third bison release took place, now part of the “LIFE Bison” project funded by the European Commission. During the next four years, annual releases of at least another 80 bison in total will take place in cooperation with the local community.

Rewilding is now on the rise in Scotland, with lands returning to nature and nature-based tourism developing rapidly. Whether your interest stems from hiking and exploring the highlands, or venturing out onto the inner seas in search of dolphins, Scotland has it all. A rich heritage steeped in tradition and covering a vast array of scenery, this cultural melting pot is waiting to be discovered.

The Cairngorms National Park is one of the most recognised and well-known parks to visit and explore, but there is much more beneath Scotland’s surface waiting to be discovered. Partnering with SCOTLAND: The Big Picture, the European Safari Company is helping focus attention on special experience programmes, guided and led to showcase the rewilding movement.

In contrast to the mainland, heading off to the Outer Hebrides by ferry brings dramatic coastal and island landscapes. Exploring Uist will bring you closer to the raw beauty of the area, its rich Gaelic culture and the amazing wildlife to be seen and discovered. Dolphin watching by kayak or boat, hiking trails and sea tours will fill your days and warm hospitality paired with delicious meals keep you coming back for more.

REWILDING EFFORTS
While the activities of man have taken their toll, the rise of rewilding in Scotland now offers hope that the wild nature for which the country is rightly renowned can be restored. From Cairngorms Connect to the Coigach & Assynt Living Landscape initiative, today a growing number of inspirational rewilding projects are demonstrating how rewilding can benefit both people and wildlife.
UIST ISLAND EXPERIENCE

A three-night stay for two at Uist Forest Retreat, exploring the dramatic island landscapes, including an outing in search of otters. Hiking, beautiful coast lines and amazing seafood on your doorstep. The retreat offers stunning self-catering accommodation on North Uist. The uniquely designed treehouse cabins are nestled amongst the forest with views out to long sandy beaches, Vallay Island and the hills of Harris in the distance. Relax by the wood burning stove or soak in the views from the freestanding bath. This is an ideal retreat for couples wishing to truly “get away from it all” and unwind in the exceptionally scenic landscape of the Outer Hebrides.

Both circular self-catering cabins are based on the prehistoric wheelhouse design of the Iron Age, the remains of which can be seen in many places throughout Uist. All the timber is UK sourced and the sedum roof a stonecrop and wildflower mix to create a little wildlife habitat. Both cabins are raised of the ground in the style of a treehouse, to leave the ground below untouched and to give the best opportunity to admire the unrivalled sea views along the coastline.

Nestled between the Adriatic Sea and the Alps, Slovenia is a destination not to be missed. Known for its diverse summer and winter activities, the country is earning a reputation as one of Europe’s newest and finest green destinations. More than half of this diverse country’s surface is forested, providing a rich natural landscape ripe for exploration.

The people of Slovenia are warm and friendly. The development of nature-based tourism is a priority, encouraging communities to take a more sustainable path for both wild nature and people. Brown bears, wolves, lynx and many other dynamic species inhabit natural areas – with the onset of nature-based tourism these key species are being accepted more, fostering better human-wildlife relationships.

Partnerships with forestry departments and local associations are encouraging nature-based tourism development. In the last few years extensive research by Discover Dinarics has been conducted to understand bear populations across both Slovenia and Croatia.

With vast rivers and mountains, Slovenia’s southern section is an undeniably exciting destination. Combine mountain explorations with old forest hikes, wildlife watching with river rafting and add in a stopover in the country’s capital – Ljubljana.

Accessible from a number of surrounding airports, the best option is flying in directly to Ljubljana and after a short twenty-minute transfer, arrive in the capital. The well-developed city centre provides diverse tourism offerings. Great hotels, apartments and other accommodations will suit varied tastes and styles, but be sure to keep an eye open for recognised green destinations.

REWILDING EFFORTS

By adding Slovenia-based offerings to its growing portfolio, the European Safari Company is contributing to bear conservation and drive nature-based tourism development in the country’s Kočevje region. While bears remain a heavily managed species in Europe, the increase in bear numbers in Slovenia is underpinning a new trend towards “bear tourism”, with the LIFE DINALP BEAR project (a member of Rewilding Europe’s European Rewilding Network) working to change local mindsets and engaging stakeholders such as local hunting associations, the forestry industry and a range of European tourism partners in the planning and implementation of a bear tourism model.
BEST OF SLOVENIA

Slovenia is one of the few European countries where three large carnivore species can be spotted in their natural habitat – brown bears, wolves and Eurasian lynx. Our partners developed this unique programme in collaboration with the Life DinAlp Bear project and the Biotechnical Faculty of the University of Ljubljana, according to sustainable tourism standards and with the smallest possible impact on the environment, especially wildlife.

Day 1: In the morning you will arrive at Ljubljana Airport, and be transferred downtown. This medieval city is a must see, and in the afternoon, you will have a sightseeing tour with your guide, followed by dinner in the old castle overlooking the city. You will spend the night in a family owned hotel in a central location, where you will also enjoy a leisurely breakfast the next morning.

Day 2: The day’s adventure, which takes place in the region of Kočevska, includes parts of the Roška pešpot hiking trail. In the evening – in partnership with a local hunting association – a guided observation of bears will be organised at a hunting observatory. The best time to observe bears is late in the afternoon, just before dusk. Since bears follow more or less the same routine every day and are used to frequenting the area around the station, they almost always appear for visitors. Dinner is included in the package. This experience is part of an outreach and development program engaging local associations to develop a more sustainable partnership with nature.

Day 3: After a hearty breakfast, prepared with locally grown ingredients, you will trek the Roska Trail and possibly visit the Željna Caves, where people have been searching for shelter for over 20,000 years. After lunch, you are transported back to Ljubljana Airport where your experience ends.
EXPERIENCE OVERVIEW

- A chance to see bears in the wild

- Fully guided by local experts
- May - August
- 2 - 8 people
- Includes listed meals and activities, local transfers and guides
- Starting from 1295 euros per person, sharing
